The Changing Role of Community Colleges:

An Update from Columbus State Community College

Val Moeller, Ph.D., president, Columbus State Community College

Today, community colleges educate more than half the nation's undergraduates.

Our own Columbus State Community College has mushroomed from 13,000 students in 1990 to nearly 21,000 today. They employ over 2,300 full and part-time faculty and staff and operate from 10 sites throughout the four county region they serve.

In the 20th century, community colleges responded adroitly to the demands of the times as World War II veterans using the GI Bill packed campuses at the same time industries needed skilled workers to convert from armaments to consumer goods.

Funding cuts, an increasing population and technology are the driving forces behind the newest test of community colleges' agility.

Join Dr. Val Moeller, president of Columbus State Community College, for a discussion on the role of the community colleges' agility. Enrollment continues to increase as students seek an affordable and flexible education alternative. In addition, business professionals are increasingly turning to community colleges as a way to keep up with technological innovations.

Community colleges face increasing demands in a changing world. Constraints on public funds show no signs of abating, so the question is how can they meet the challenge?

Join Dr. Val Moeller, president of Columbus State Community College, for a discussion on the role of the community college and her strategy to guide Columbus State into the future.

Beginning the Social Security Debate

Dean Baker, co-director, Center for Economic and Policy Research

Don't miss the first in a periodic new series of Columbus Metropolitan Club forums presented in collaboration with The John Glenn Institute at The Ohio State University.

One of the most ambitious elements of the Bush Administration's domestic agenda is its controversial plan to fundamentally restructure Social Security. The Bush Administration has argued that the program is unsustainable and has proposed reducing benefits and allowing workers to create individual private accounts. To help us sort through the competing claims, Dean

Baker, co-director of the Center for Economic Policy Research and a national expert on Social Security, will argue that there is no real crisis in Social Security and will raise questions about private accounts, while advocating for other reforms that will strengthen the program. This is the beginning of what portends to be an ongoing community discussion.

Urban Planner Shares Smart Growth Solutions

"Our objective [as urban planners] is to get rid of parking lots; they don't belong downtown. One-way streets should be limited; they are very unfriendly to visitors."

About Us...

CMC firmly believes in the free expression of all ideas and the benefits of an open exchange of information. CMC is non-partisan and takes no positions on issues.

Anyone can join! From the beginning, there have been no barriers to membership and all forums have welcomed the general public. Diversity, both in programming and membership, is one of the many benefits of being involved in CMC. Everyone is welcome.

Each forum is an hour-long program that starts with a brief introduction followed by 25-30 minutes of speaker comments. The final half hour is filled with unfiltered, unrehearsed questions from the audience.
