New Horizons for COSI: Meet David Chesebrough, New President & CEO of COSI

David Chesebrough

Dr. David Chesebrough began as President and Chief Executive Officer of COSI on April 1 following the endorsement from Carl Kohrt, COSI Governing Board Chair, saying that Chesebrough was the board's unanimous choice after an intense national search.

"We are extremely pleased that Dr. Chesebrough has agreed to become our new President and CEO. His passion for education gives him a profound appreciation for our mission here at COSI. At the same time, he brings a strong business acumen and understands the financial challenges of the non-profit science center world," said Kohrt.

Chesebrough replaces Dr. Kathryn Sullivan, who announced her resignation in February to take on the role of COSI science advisor. Sullivan served as President of COSI for almost ten years. Chesebrough joins the science center after five and one half years as President and CEO of the Buffalo Museum of Science.

Chesebrough says that COSI was an early benchmark that he frequented and studied when he joined the science center field 18 years ago, relating that his professional viewpoints have been influenced by the best of COSI.

How will he continue to improve and enhance the experiences COSI offers and build additional partnerships with educational and cultural partners to sustain the growth and deepening of our service to the community and region?"

Demystifying Density: What Planners, Developers, Transit Advocates, Local Officials and Citizens REALLY mean when they talk about DENSITY

Harriet Tregoning

Harriet Tregoning, Director of the Smart Growth Leadership Institute.

Presented in partnership with Central Ohio AIA.

Sponsored by Columbus Downtown Development Corporation and Capital South CURC.

Communities across the country are facing tremendous challenges. Many of our towns and cities are growing faster than we can manage while others are looking for ways to jumpstart or restart stalled growth. Shortsighted planning often sacrifices the long-term fiscal health of our communities --starving our established downtown businesses, overlooking existing investments in our older communities, eating up our farms and open spaces and damaging our environment while driving up the cost of housing and transportation.

Many community leaders are overwhelmed by the tasks of changing the existing development patterns, overhauling outdated plans and rewriting laws and regulations.

There's much talk about "density," but is density a good thing or bad? Is it about zoning or lack of it? About how many units per acre and if so, what kind of "units" are we talking about? Confused?

Director of the Smart Growth Leadership Institute, Harriet Tregoning hopes to "demystify density" for CMC and AIA members and guests. Tregoning has worked on smart growth at the state and federal level since 1996. She was Maryland's Secretary of Planning and, later, the Secretary for Smart Growth where she chaired a fifteen-member Smart Growth Subcabinet.

A project of Smart Growth America, the Smart Growth Leadership Institute is dedicated to helping state and local elected, civic and business leaders design and implement effective land use strategies to successfully leverage the coming growth and gain greater control over the pace and pattern of development.
