Critical Thinking about Media Messages in an Election Year

Frank Baker,
Media Literacy
Consultant

Daily hundreds of media messages compete for our attention and

Are you ready for the barrage of hard-hitting commercials?

Feeling bombarded with smiling politicians plastered on COTA buses, t-shirted volunteers on street corners and wads of campaign literature popping up everywhere? 'Tis the season for a hotly contested election!

During the political season the messages escalate! Media educator Frank Baker will speak on media education and its role in 21st century classrooms, media literacy and elections – focusing on the media's coverage of campaigns, political advertising, and how being media literate can help voters decipher the facts.

A journalism graduate of the University of Georgia, Baker worked in television news from 1977 to 1986, at stations in South Carolina, Maryland and Florida. In 1987, he joined the Orange County (Orlando, FL) Public School System as an administrator in the areas of

Sponsored by Time Warner Cable and Ohio Cable Telecommunications Association

Instructional TV and Distance Education. While there, he collaborated with both Time Warner Cable and The Orlando Sentinel to bring media literacy education to teachers and students in the nation's 16th largest school district. Upon returning to South Carolina in 1997, he taught a college level media literacy course for educators and developed a nationally recognized media literacy resource website.
