Mark Kvamme: Gung-ho on O-hi-Oh

Since coming to Ohio in January, California's venture capital company Sequoia Capital Partner Mark Kvamme has been a bit of a lightning rod, taking some flack from Governor John Kasich's opponents.

Kasich brought his business acquaintance in to help transition the Department of Development's lead on economic development to a new private, nonprofit entity called JobsOhio. A high priority initiative for Kasich, JobsOhio consists of a 12-member governor-appointed board of business and industry experts to drive Ohio's economic development strategy.

Very successful in helping start up companies, Kvamme took the challenge for a token $1 salary. Kvamme said, "I've always felt like I should do public service, I've been fortunate to be rewarded financially quite well in my business and I thought it was time to take some of that expertise to the public sector."

The cry rang out that an out-of-state resident could not legally hold a cabinet position, consequently, Kasich appointed Kvamme to a newly-created job "Director of Jobs Creation."

All in all, Kasich thinks Mark Kvamme can help fix Ohio by helping to create companies that will create more jobs. Kvamme said, "It's like a VC (venture capital) job. It's like starting a new company. We're going to take a Silicon Valley start-up approach to economic development."

When Kasich established the Jobs Creation position, he said Kvamme will oversee "job creation policy statewide, work with regional economic development partners to enhance job creation strategies and help state agencies maximize the economic benefit of their operations."

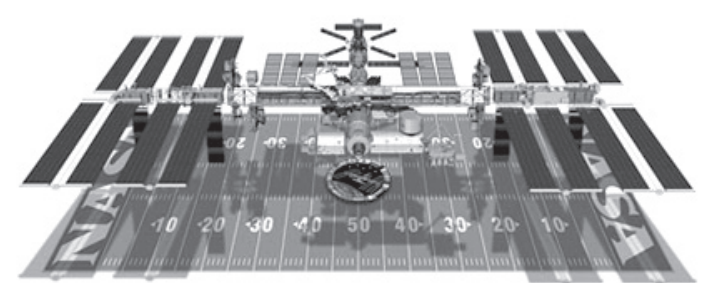

Six months into the job, we'll hear Kvamme's comments on how it's working out, and what progress Ohio's making, and what obstacles and assets he's discovered.
