Voices of the Community: What Central Ohio is Saying About Education

Over the past year, United Way of Central Ohio has been holding "Community Conversations" with small, diverse groups of people across Franklin County. These conversations focus on understanding the aspirations and concerns people have about the direction of our society in general and about the state of education in particular. More than 450 people participated in 50 conversations, and shared a wealth of personal insights and ideas for change.

The results of the conversations give insight into what people in our community care about, what they believe about education, and what they are willing to do to help all of our students get high-quality educations that prepare them for productive careers. United Way will use the information gleaned from the conversations to influence the direction of its work in the future, as it collaborates with partners to
