It's been said that if you have a job, unemployment is 0% and if you don't have a job it's 100%.

While it's neither 0% nor 100%, the high unemployment hangs between 8% and 9% and continues to plague the community pushing families to soup kitchens, food pantries and shelters. Talk of a second wave of recession fills the airwaves and the columns. When will this end and how are the human service providers holding up? Are the resources dangerously low, or are folks coming up with new and creative ways to deal with the needs of the community's less fortunate?

Regardless of a second wave of recession becomes reality or not, poverty remains high in the region and human services providers will be called on to help.

How are they holding up?

First hand insight and stark appraisals from those on the front lines of the breadlines.

Election Conversations: Columbus Mayoral Candidates

Incumbent
Michael Coleman

Candidate
Earl Smith

In partnership with The Columbus Dispatch and WOSU Public Media

With support from THE Jeffrey Company

There is an election November 8 to determine the next mayor for the 16th largest city in the United States.

On the ballot will be the incumbent Michael B. Coleman and challenger Earl Smith.

Coleman has been mayor since 2000 and reelected three times. The Mayor's website reads: "Since taking office in 2000, Mayor Michael B. Coleman has built Columbus' reputation as one of the best cities in the nation by building stronger, safer neighborhoods and creating jobs by maintaining a high quality of life."

It goes on to list the many accolades Columbus has received and milestones the city has achieved under Coleman's watch. Yet, Columbus ranks near the top in poverty, obesity and joblessness compared to similar metropolitan regions.

Earl Smith is a 32-year police veteran who held a number of high-profile positions with the Division of Police. He served as the Division's spokesperson as the uniformed supervisor for the Public Information Unit. During his years with the Crime Prevention Unit, and later as a supervisor with the Community Liaison Section within the Strategic Response Bureau, Smith represented the Division in virtually all of Columbus's neighborhoods and came to know many of the city's local community leaders.

And, he's running for mayor against Coleman.

Hear what each candidate will do to improve our city and to earn our vote.
