Columbus' Healthcare CEO's Discuss Healthmap 2013

At CMC's forum on January 16, the CEO's of Columbus' four major hospital systems, OhioHealth, Nationwide Children's Hospital, OSU Wexner Medical Center and Mount Carmel Health will release the findings Healthmap 2013.

Healthmap 2013 is a health needs assessment for our community, explains Jeff Klinger, president and CEO of Central Ohio Hospital Council. While individual hospitals have voluntarily done needs assessment studies, the newly passed federal healthcare reform bill now requires such studies.

Anticipating this requirement, Klinger realized that it made sense for the healthcare delivery organizations to collaborate for the required study and the hospital leaders agreed. They also realized that other local organizations could benefit from the study's results and provide important expertise about the local community. The steering committee grew to include the Columbus and Franklin County Health Departments, United Way and local community health center.

did much of the data collection and preparation of the report. The steering committee determined what data to collect and reviewed findings to prioritize the greatest healthcare needs of the community.

Klinger says there are other communities involved in collaborative needs assessment studies but there is one aspect that will make Columbus standout as a cooperative community. After individual hospitals and organizations develop their own strategies as the result of this study, the steering committee will regroup in the spring to look for gaps or opportunities. "Taking this next step is unique." Says Klinger, "It is not required, it just makes sense."

He concludes, "The study results will be available for small organizations too, making this a true community report and not just something the hospitals will use."
