Racism: Where Do We Go From Here? Policing in the Community: Does the Past Dictate the Future?

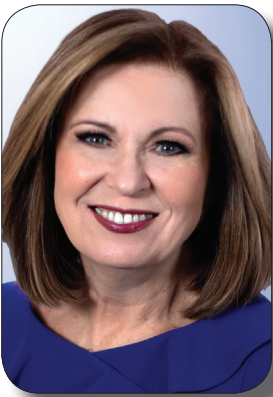

James

Police officers, the police department, its chief, the FOP and their relationship with our community's leaders and citizens is under a magnifying glass! Following the May 28 Black Lives Matter marches and protests, and those of the weeks that followed, the police have been criticized from both sides: Not enough enforcement to protect property from vandalism and too much for pepper spraying peaceful protesters, including City Council President Shannon Hardin, County Commissioner Kevin Boyce and US Congresswoman Joyce Beatty. Cries rang out in Columbus and across the country for police reform even to the extent of calling for police departments to be defunded. In Columbus, City Attorney Zack Klein has created a list of reforms. The Mayor's office has called for a citizen's review board. While all up for discussion, consideration, and implementation, everyone recognizes that the law enforcement union, the

Fraternal Order of Police will have to buy into anything new. Of course, the police have their side of the story, too. The relationship between the City of Columbus and the FOP is a long one. Taking a walk through the history of that relationship can put the current situation in perspective and potentially predict what might, or might not, happen as the city negotiates reforms. To lead this history lesson, CMC presents Larry James, managing director, Crabbe Brown & James, attorney for National FOP, Mike Curtin, retired journalist and Associate Publisher Emeritus, The Columbus Dispatch and former Representation, 17th District, Ohio House of Representatives, Colleen Marshall, co-anchor, NBC4. CMC and Cardinal Health Proudly Present Conversation 2020! Black History 101 Mobile Museum, with Founder and Curator, Dr. Khalid el-Hakim

After returning from the historic 1995 Million Man March in Washington, D.C., el-Hakim became inspired to take his private collection of then 500 artifacts on the road. He started displaying the items around Detroit at various community meetings. His goal? Bring folks up to speed on the history that's often omitted from textbooks. When visitors come face to face with the artifacts, el-Hakim says he hopes they will walk away inspired to conduct some of their own research. He leaves them with one question: What side of history do you want to be on?" (Ebony February 28, 2017) Join CMC on a journey of education and enlightenment through the Mobile Museum and a keynote from Dr. el-Hakim for this very special Conversation 2020. Visit the Museum website at: <https://www.blackhistorymobilemuseum.com/> For this SPECIAL EVENT on August 26th, limited in-house audience seating is available and registration includes a tour of the speaker's Mobile Museum onsite before the forum! Conversation 2020 is CMC's only annual fundraiser! Paid registrations for the in-house audience are required by Monday, August 24th. We cannot accept walk-ins.
