Intrinsic Inclusion: Rebooting Your Biased Brain

INTRINSIC INCLUSION™: REBOOTING YOUR BIASED BRAIN engages readers in exploring if and how we might rewire our brains to disrupt implicit unconscious biases, change ‘default’ mindsets, and develop intrinsically inclusive behaviors. (from the book cover).

Through the events of this summer, we have all learned that we unwittingly behave according to conscious or unconscious bias. It’s how human beings operate based on past experiences, outside influences, preferences and prejudices.

Sometimes it’s positive and part of survival. Other times, it can be hurtful and destructive to relationships and society.

Once we admit and recognize our potentially harmful biases, what do we do about it?

Authors Dr. Janet Reid and Vincent Brown explain that we can reboot our brains. They begin by asking timely and provocative questions to prompt important discussions about disrupting implicit biases and mitigating their effects professionally and personally.

Uniquely qualified to lead this discussion, Brown is a successful entrepreneur, published author, motivational speaker, executive coach and experienced training developer and facilitator, with expertise in diversity and inclusion.

Reid has extensive experience on corporate and civic boards, as well as corporate leadership in diversity initiatives.

Presented in Partnership with Central Ohio Diversity Consortium, CMC’s September 23 forum features Vincent R. Brown, author, president and CEO, V. Randolph Brown Consulting, Dr. Janet B. Reid, author, founder and CEO, BRBS World, LLC, with host, Colleen Marshall, co-anchor, WCMH NBC4
